American Micro Acquires Microfilm & Imaging of Kansas City

Acquisition expands American Micro's digital document services footprint in the region.

KANSAS CITY, MO (June 16, 2010) American Micro Company, a regional provider of digital document conversion services and software, today announced the acquisition of Microfilm and Imaging of Kansas City (MIKC).

The acquisition allows American Micro to expand its capacity for local document conversion services while positioning itself for future growth. According to American Micro CEO Mark Zecy, the acquisition of MIKC was a natural fit of two well-recognized companies. "MIKC has an outstanding customer reputation in Kansas City," said Zecy. "We are looking forward to capitalizing on their generations of industry knowledge and experience."

MIKC was formed in 1998 by partners Fred South and Dan Boyd. Both men had a long history of document management expertise and had quickly grown the organization's client list and reputation in Kansas City. Members of the MIKC senior staff will join American Micro.

The combined company will reside at American Micro's current 1933 Troost location. The cost of the acquisition was not disclosed.
